Excerpt from Allied soldier Robert Lindsay Mackay's war diary

15th of September 1916

There had been a big show this morning ... Our people suffered heavily from our new gunfire methods – the barrage – to which our men were not accustomed ...

Well! Here we were shelled for three days by the old Hun, fortunately most of his stuff went 50 yards* over, though we did have a few people laid out now and then. Found a dug-out, but rarely went to it. Weather beautiful. It was somewhat interesting to a newcomer to watch the shells knocking Martinpuich into a heap of bricks, only about 150–200 yards* away. Though not so amusing when the bricks began to fall around one. Hun used a lot of shrapnel against us – dirty stuff! We often picked up bits which fell all around us, but had to let them go at once – they were so hot. At night one of our tanks just on our right flank took fire. It blazed away for a long time while the Hun amused himself flinging shells at it.

We had a very lively three days of it ... We used for line Headquarters an old dug-out in the near end of Martinpuich with eight entrances – five of which were blown in by shellfire, one actually while I was inside.
