Research into our service personnel

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander men and women have served in every armed conflict since the Boer War, frequently hiding their ancestry to join up.

But according to professors Mick Dodson and John Maynard, there is very little documentation of Indigenous service personnel. “It’s a neglected history,” Prof Maynard said.

“Aboriginal men and women have historically missed out on receiving recognition and I think it’s timely that we made a move to change that.”

The professors are part of a team of researchers about to start compiling the nation’s first comprehensive record of Indigenous service in the defence forces.

The ‘Serving Our Country: a history of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the defence of Australia’ project will involve two years of community consultations followed by another two years of compiling the records of Indigenous servicemen and women, nurses, ancillary staff and peacekeepers from the Boer War through to 2000.

“There’s been some – not a lot – recognition of individual stories but nothing comprehensive,” Prof Dodson, from the National Centre for Indigenous Studies at ANU, said.

The researchers are hoping to unearth letters, diaries, photographs, medals and memorabilia and are also collecting oral histories from returned service personnel and their family members.

I want to ensure that the traditional laws, customs, sites, bush tucker, trees, plants and water at Koongarra stay the same as when they were passed on to me by my father and great-grandfather. Inscribing the land at Koongarra as World Heritage is an important step in making this protection lasting and real.
