

Start here.

a) The personal management skills of the youth affect their position in the workplace. In order for ~~the~~ youth to join ~~the~~ ^{any} work place they have to be 14 or over. Youth are expected when in a workplace, to be ready to clock on, on time, they are required to be neatly groomed and be tidy. They are required to show up to their shifts. They are required to do their job. They are required to follow all workplace rules. Different jobs require different things and require different knowledge.

b) Labour force participation varies vastly across the life span. As a teenager, the individual is energetic, and wants to work. Teenagers are ranked one the age groups that have the most participated in the labour force. For a lot of people, throughout their life have a lot of different jobs however for some, they have the same job their entire life.

As a teenager (14-18), they just want a casual job, eg. McDonalds, Coles etc, while their at school just to earn some money.

But as they become older (19-25), they want a more stable job that has good and consistent income. When they start a family, they want a full-time, permanent job, that has a set, sustainable and good income which can provide for their family.

Additional writing space on back page.

However, once they reach 60+, they ~~stop~~ retire as they are getting too old and don't have the energy or strength to work anymore.

← Tick this box if you have continued this answer in another writing booklet.

Start here.

c)

All work places have the same rights and responsibilities for their employees although they may differ slightly.

There are different rights and responsibilities for employees who do different kind of work, e.g. casual, part time, full-time etc.

However each individual has the right to earn more than the set bare-minimum amount:

If you are full-time / permanent, you have, by law, the right to have a set amount of paid annual leave, sick leave or parental leave. You also have a set amount of hours work, minimum for full-time is 35 hours a week.

Part-time are also allowed to have ^{paid} sick leave. They also have a set amount of hours per week.

Casuals do not have any sort of leave. They are also ~~not~~ don't have the right to a certain amount of hours per week. Each work place also have different set employees responsibilities or requirements. Although the responsibilities are set from the same basis, they can differ depending on the workplace. In some workplaces, they might have certain people who have a certain responsibility such as stock take person, head of kitchen etc. Although all employees have the same responsibility; to follow the rules set by the workplace.

If there is an issue among the workplace, whether it be incorrect pay, discrimination or harassment etc. ~~work workplace~~ The union, which is a company that works to keep workplaces free from any unfairness, steps in and will address and sort out the issue. Every workplace structure has a

Additional writing space on back page.

Union in which the employees have a right to join if they wish.

← Tick this box if you have continued this answer in another writing booklet.