Question Number

Discovery can be sudden and unexpected, or it can be carefully and deliberately planned. They can be a physical discovery which evokes by curiosity, wonder and necessity, which will always leads to an emotional or an intellectual discovery, as themselves and the world around them, ^{and it} can change our perspectives and renew our values.

Many poems written by Robert Frost conveys the ideas of how curiosity ~~and~~ or necessity evoked ~~the~~ discovery. In the poem "The Tuft of Flowers", the persona had a physical discovery evoked by curiosity. "I asked question that have no reply", the persona wonders what the butterfly will lead him to, he follows the butterfly and discovers the beautiful tuft of flower. This leads to an emotional discovery that both the persona and the mover appreciate the beauty of flower. "And I must be, as he had been alone" "Men work together", the ^{change of} ~~different~~ values of the persona from ~~alone~~ loneliness to a binding connection between ~~6~~ them clearly shows that the individual, ~~6~~ persona, discovers the sense of unity and empathy. The ~~repe~~ repetition ~~of the~~ "Whether they work together or apart." The same phrase used in different context also enriches the idea of bond ^{between human}. ~~This~~ This clearly shows how curiosity leads the persona the discoveries of the mover, and this changed ^{his} perspective.

The ideas of necessity ^{and curiosity} leads to discoveries can also be found in the poem "Stopping by Woods on a ~~Snow~~ Snowy Evening." The persona in a dark, snowy evening ~~is~~ is stopped in a forest because of curiosity. He wanted to find what is it in the deep forest. He had a physical discovery of the wood and the forest. "The woods are lovely, deep and dark," the use of descriptive words shows how ^{the persona} appreciate the forest. "But I have promises to keep" the idea of necessity that he must move on evokes an intellectual discoveries that he can not give up the world. The contrast between the ~~the~~ comfortable environment and the harsh of living in the world demonstrate that the persona has a value of not giving up, and a possible discoveries on how much he loves his families or interests motivate him to keep on keeping on.

Discoveries leads by curiosity or necessity has also impact on the characters in the play "Rainbow's End" written by Jane Harrison. "What surname is that for a person who even don't know how to gut a fish.", Nan Dew was curious about Errol's background. This curiosity leads to a ~~plus~~ intellectual discovery that Errol is actually a "Vickor" ~~is~~ instead of "Fisher". This ~~huge~~ discovery certainly has a great impact on Nan Dear and definitely affect the endings of the play. Further more, Nan Dear changes her attitude and perceptions towards white people from evil and disgusting to a realization of not all white people are nasty, the epiphany of discovery leads Nan Dear to a transformation. Again, we ~~can~~ this scene clearly shows curiosity can lead individuals to discoveries of themselves and the world, and how Nan Dear has changed her values.

Emily Matchar, the composer as well as the persona in my related text "Peanut Butter Summer" is a girl full of curiosity and wonder. Emily and Peter travelled to Europe. Emily has many physical discoveries on the food and culture in Europe, "I ~~was~~ loved I never have the same for twice" shows Emily always want to discover more. Along the way, ~~side~~ through the physical discovery, Emily also ~~had~~ has an intellectual discoveries towards Peter, she realise that Peter is different ~~to~~ to her. "Why waste money on 'might' when you have a sure bet" "Why, indeed".

The sarcastic of "why indeed" demonstrate that Emily has a different values towards Peter, while Emily is ~~a~~ has a heart of curiosity and adventure, but ^{all} Peter want is what he knows, what is necessary for ^{not curiosity} him. The comparison of curiosity and necessity leads both Emily and Peter realise they are living in two different worlds. The discovery ~~is~~ evokes by curiosity and necessity leads them to ~~a~~ new perspective towards each other, and discovers that they have huge diversity in values towards the world.

In conclusion, the texts definitely shows how ~~is~~ curiosity ~~is~~ or necessity can lead individuals to discoveries of themselves and the world, and the new aspects changes their perspectives and values.
