In what ways is dialogue used to capture the young couple's reactions to the items they find? The couple's reactions to these few items is priceless. Very little attention is put on each other. 'Oh, man, look at this.'

Says the couple to each other. The excitement the couple show for the pile of rubbish is immense. The man looking at the trunks the woman yells 'don't take those trunks' the woman called to him 'Leave them!' Frenzied the couple had no way of ~~carry~~ carrying all of this stuff. The dialogue in just these very few sentences shows the emotion of the couple towards the junk they don't see junk but a pile of opportunity. 'Look here' she cried out with excitement

How does the image represent an individual who values discovered objects

The painting of Albertus Seba in 1730 behind him you see a collection of exotic animals and wildlife in preserved jars to his right in his hand is a snake in a preserved jar. Just under that is a book full of images of exotic wildlife. Near the book is a collection of beautiful shells. all this shows a huge amount of exploring. This person has most likely devoted their entire life to discovery.
