

In an Aged care facility a client must feel welcome and comfortable.

Confidentiality is a major part in this facilities. knowing clients can trust staff with their issues.

It is your duty of care as a Aged care worker to satisfy clients as much as you can. and keep their issues and problems as discreet as possible

Client centred care is taking care of the most important of the clients needs. Basic hygiene washing, making the client feel as clean and well groomed.

feeding, feeding the clients enough so they are not hungry and helping them with their daily routine as much as possible.

Taking observations and trying to keep the client well for as long as they can.

Start here.

Client centered care in an aged care facility is putting Aged care clients first. General hygiene, washing, grooming, clean clothing, feeding, exercising and social interaction with other clients.

Clients confidentiality is staff members treating clients issues as discreetly as possible and keeping their private lives to themselves.

Duty of care in an aged care facility, taking the clients needs and taking care of the clients. As clients in an aged care facility may not be able to do much themselves.

It is the aged care facility staff to care for them and make them feel as comfortable as possible.