Global peace and functionality is a common goal to those insisting on achieving world order. The concept ~~expressed~~ of this rotates around the idea that all nations can operate in harmony and work well as a functional unit. However, for various reasons this idealistic concept is never quite achieved. State sovereignty is the ~~belief~~ belief all ~~nations~~ countries have the ability to self run without external influence. Denial of this may be denial of ~~justice~~ freedom and so, many nations out of line with working towards this goal impede on the ~~un~~ shared resolution.

The assistance of this idea comes when a nation-state believes in the common cause. Additionally, each nation has a ~~some~~ degree of accountability and responsibility as only they can be found liable. A nation running independently that interferes with global order is easily identified. Therefore global action can be taken against and the deterrence of trade, and various other things can be practiced.

Tyrannical behaviour in such a society is not accepted. In many cases, as evident throughout many middle-eastern rebellions. Leaders of such a nature were found to be extreme. Outcomes for these radical tyrants have not been favoured and over the last few decades and we have seen many nations create revolutions. Libya, Syria and Egypt just to name a few.

To an extent, this shows the intolerance to ~~world~~ forces many impeding full world order. Although ~~much~~ of the issues surrounding world order remain prevalent is society and adjustments in attitudes expand. Expectations for a certain way of life apply and conditions changed.

The United Nations manages global order or at least is the most prominent arm in protecting this ideal. Its role includes prevention of escalation with disputing nations, dissolving tense situations and adhering complaints regarding such.

However, commitment on a wide-scale is required. Every nation has and plays a role in promoting world order. The United Nation has a large role but so do each and every single one of us.
