Darlington R, Land of Hopes and Illusions, Shakespeare Head Press, 1987, p 161

SOURCE B
An extract from a letter by Lieutenant Raws, an Australian, to his father after enlisting in July 1915

I hope that you will be proud to think that you have two sons—who were never fighting men, who abhorr the sight of blood and cruelty and suffering of any kind, but who yet are game to go out bravely to a war forced upon them . . . I claimed no great patriotism. No government, other than the most utterly democratic, is worth fighting for. But there are principles, and there are women, and there are standards of decency, that are worth shedding one's blood for, surely.

Abhor — hate
SOURCE C   An extract from an anti-war pamphlet, 1917

If the politicians of Australia want war, let them take their own carcasses to the firing line to be targets for modern machine-guns and food for cholera . . . If they want blood, LET THEM CUT THEIR OWN THROATS . . . WORKERS OF THE WORLD UNITE! DON’T BECOME HIRED MURDERERS! DON’T JOIN THE ARMY OR NAVY!

Carcasses — bodies

Cholera — fatal disease

In the war’s early stages volunteers far exceeded the number of men the army was willing to accept, but as the published casualty lists grew the public mood changed from enthusiasm to sorrow and shock. Recruiting campaigns were launched throughout the country, and at first they were highly successful in encouraging or shaming men into enlisting. By mid-1916, however, they were clearly failing to attract the large numbers the government required. While activities such as fund-raising and recruiting campaigns on the whole tended to unite Australians, at times they also heightened social divisions by the shame they attached to those who . . . were unwilling or unable to enlist, and to poorer families who were hard pressed to provide for themselves, let alone give money to the funds.

Heightened social divisions — made groups in society more divided
