Question 1 (continued)

- (d) In this scene, the director uses Gempol and Andri to represent the conflict between two different value systems. Analyse how this is done and how the conflict is resolved.

The conflict between the two different value systems is illustrated firstly by Gempol's belief that the sun and chiller will stop the rain. Andri seems more doubtful as he is from a more westernised, judgmental upbringing. The boys then have conflict supported by the movement of the camera between the two boys (cutting), concerning Andri stealing, which Gempol states is wrong. Andri, who also knows it is wrong, then states he did not steal, but instead bought. This leads into the discussion about lying, what God knows and the affects of not telling the truth. Gempol, who has had a traditional upbringing with clear definitions between right and wrong believes if you lie bad things will happen, whilst Andri's western style upbringing causes scepticism that 'If it rains, it rains'. He doesn't believe anyone will know if he lies.

The conflict is resolved by Gempol and Andri joking about the chair that broke. This shows the bonds of their friendship which are not easily broken. This joke, however, has serious undertones that support Gempol, and the boy's agree to tell no more lies. They revert back to traditional values.
