2012 HSC - Aboriginal Studies
Band 1/2
Sample 3 Question 18

In the Indigenous population the health of the Aboriginal people is starting to increase because they are starting to live in a healthier and more cleaner society.

The health rates of communities are starting to climb every year but not by very much, but they are still going ~~up~~ up which is good. They are getting jobs which they then can get enough money to help pay for the medication and bills which are helping their families.

They can also afford the food which they need just to stay in the right health levels.

The education level of the Indigenous people are also rising with alot of the Aboriginal communities across the world having more people from them into good working jobs or universities. The best thing about that is it is good role modeling for younger Indigenous people which helps them go through their schooling careers and get a better education.

It might convince them to go through to do year 12 and go to university or get an apprenticeship. Even if they drop out in year 10 or 11 to go on and get a job such as a part time, full time or even go to tafe and do courses.

If they go to tafe they can do a years worth of apprenticeship and do the last 2 years out in the work force.

Any type of education is good for anyone.
