The Health Issues of Indigenous Australians are an ongoing problem within their communities, funding for good health care is a problem the Australian government is addressing. Programs and facilities are being funded by the government and the tax payers of Australia to help with health care in rural and urban areas across the nation. A program from the USA called "closing the gap" is one of the main health care providers. Borrowed from the American Indigenous people it showed a great improvement within the Native people. Hoping we as a country can help to putting together Doctors, Dental Care, Children Doctors, etc to improve health in rural areas of Australia. A huge issue Indigenous people are having is Birth Defects 3 in every 10 children have some Kind of physical or mental disorder and have very little treatment to help with the child's condition let alone prevent it.

Indigenous people's health has begun to increase over the past 10 years to a positive standard, but more programs are being implemented to succeed with ~~what was~~ great expectation.

Indigenous people are more prone to get diseases white men get, such as diabetes, renal failure, glycombia heart disease, cancer and ~~a~~ sight lose these are all things that can not be treated without the right health care or doctor.
