

Start here.

There has been no significant extent for Indigenous people improving health and Education only mild changes. These changes are gradually getting ~~of~~ better over time as people begin to understand Indigenous people.

The problem with education is that it is set up for non-Indigenous people this means that ~~the~~ Indigenous people are set up to fail.

To fix this there would ~~be~~ have to be more Aboriginal teachers that understand what there going through and more hands on activities

~~From~~ Aboriginal people are only recognised in schools on ~~naidoc~~ day and the ~~maori~~ maori's of waikato have a week to celebrate their language and culture aka language week in NZ and they all including the white teachers speak traditional maori language every day in schools.

Tweed has (plp) personalised learning plans and norta norta tutoring to help with education and this slowly help the indigenous community.

The health of both Aboriginal and maori's are both below standard due to poor housing, employment, disease and diabetes, and the list goes on. Due to different types of programs Indigenous health in both communities are significantly improving. programs like ~~the~~ Aboriginal medical centres and the (sids) program ~~the~~ which help ~~to~~ ~~it~~ infant mortality rate and Aboriginal health ~~the~~ through immunisation programs and free Aboriginal check ups.

In conclusion health and Education rates are slowly improving but are ~~a~~ still not as effective as they could be.

Additional writing space on back page.