

b) the impact of the Mabo decision and subsequent legislation on Australian Indigenous Communities and their access to native title is that it gave Indigenous people strength to fight for native title and to have their land back. It also made Indigenous people to believe in themselves and to understand that their say is important as well. A community who went through the fight to claim their native title is utopia. They have access to their native title and are proud to have it as the country is very important to them and will do anything for it.

Lands Right act is another legislation to gain the rights of your land and to help claim native title. It is not easy to gain these things and can take up to months or years. The Mabo decision took years to get a answer and during those years he has supporters ~~em~~ from all the Indigenous people. And during these times it also helped them gain more recognition and become more stronger and believe in themselves. The Mabo decision had a ~~posh~~ positive impact on Australian communities as it opened their eyes and has opened opportunities for them.
