

Start here.

~~Landscapes and environments have arguably influenced every person and situation.~~

"The representations found in different environments are determined by ourselves and the perception we would like to find within our surroundings."

~~argument~~ Professor Mark H. Bickard explains through his philosophical work "How The Environment Effects The Person" that although the common belief that our experiences with the landscapes around us drastically shape and effect our lives, it is actually ourselves that decide subconsciously how the environment and our surroundings effect us.

In the novel by Alain De Botton, "Art of Travel" ~~the~~ ^{the writer} explains that upon travelling parts of the world he failed to feel fulfilled as he spent much time wanting to be at home. Although not many people have an opportunity to travel as vastly as he did, the writer insists that holidays are only good to hope and wait for and that ~~man~~ travelling will always be imagined better, therefore constantly letting us down.

Mark H. Bickard's work though suggests that it is ourselves that decide how landscapes and surroundings are perceived.

The ~~ex~~ experiences of landscape may be diverse as it is suggested that it is determined by the individuals perception, yet every person is influenced as all landscapes provoke thought.

Additional writing space on back page.