Support your answer with examples.

the rights of employees in the workplace are not entirely legally abided. It has to do with the workplace i.e. of things that can and cannot be done / wrong thing to do. Documents may include wages, lunch break of the worker / employee and also new things are run. ~~obligations~~ It is the culture of the workplace. obligations are things that employees must do in the workplace due to legislations. For example, in the financial service industry one must have an Australian Financial Mer license (regulated by ASFC) to give financial advice. If employees do not do so harsh consequences may be done.
