
Question 23 (8 marks)

Explain how government legislation and policies affect the Australian food industry.

8

Government legislation and policies affect the Australian food industry is the policy of genetically modified foods. Genetically modified foods is foods that have been changed in some way, so that they can survive in some different climates that they wouldn't be able to if they weren't modified.

The policy is that if a food has been genetically modified, then it has to say so on the package, and not say that it is organic when it is not.