

Start here.

Qn 17

a) The small family owned company who sells privately at a local market may not be affected by environmental constraints placed on large registered business'. If starting proper production the family will have to look into environmental issues. This may include the source of their timber; if it comes from timber plantation or old growth and how that affects the environment. Any pollution put out by the family, whether it be sight - if they intend to build a large work shop in their residential home. Noise pollution - using loud machinery in a potential residential setting. Physical pollution through waste - any off cuts, used products or sawdust that could be produced, the and how that affects the local environment, and if it can accordingly handle such waste.

b) With relocating and expanding a business, many factors need to be taken into consideration. These include structural issues, technical issues and personnel issues, all of which play a major part in the successful operation of any business. Structural issues deal with how the company is structured relating to employees. This can include the employees rank of the boss, foremen, quality control persons, safety managers and general workers. It is important that these issues are considered when expanding a bus business to ensure that factors and concerns better of a larger business will be addressed. The structure of the business is to ensure its smooth operation and that no factors or issues are overlooked. An example of this is a quality control person. Overseeing construction and the final product to ensure it is up to company standards before release to the client/public sale.

Technical issues are those that include process, tools, and resources concerning the company. This is important as it ensures that any new or emerging technologies have been considered by the company. This offers them a greater chance of being successful and making a greater profit, as such resources and technologies may be faster, more accurate and cheaper than existing ones. Technical issues are an important factor in the establishment of a new company to ensure their greatest chance of success.

Personnel issues are those which affect the persons of the company - the employees. This is to ensure all workers are happy in their work place and are content with safety issues, payment, working conditions, fellow employees and other concerns or issues. This is to further ensure a smooth running company.

All of these issues are important and need to be fully addressed, assessed and implemented in the expanding of a company. This is important to ensure the company has all of the latest technologies available, happy workers content with all factors in the work place around them to ensure happy workers. This combined with technical issues including the latest technologies and tools and resources guarantee a successfully expanded company and gives them the best chance at success in their expanded production.

Additional writing space on back page.

You may ask for an extra Writing Booklet if you need more space.